Marine and Charlie James Gallery are delighted to present If These Walls Could Talk – A Conversation, a group show of distinguished local and international artists exhibiting concurrently across our mutual spaces. The ten artists selected for the show comprise several artists from each gallery's stable, plus mutually selected artists from outside of our respective galleries. Each of these ten artists will be contributing multiple works for the show, in order that their work may be exhibited in both the salon environment (Marine) and the gallery environment (CJG). The artists have been encouraged to create work that explores their thoughts about the art world, and how they relate and work within it. The design of the show - multiple works exhibited concurrently across a gallery and home environment, is intended to create numerous interwoven layers of dialogue within the show. The works submitted by each artist will exist in a 1:1 dialogue with one another and the spaces themselves, will offer up their own distinct experiences of the work. By virtue of joining commercial gallery and home venues, the show should yield interesting insights on the nature of collecting as well.

If These Walls Could Talk – A Conversation will include work from the following artists: Sandow Birk and Elyse Pignolet, Jow, Steve Lambert, Nery Gabriel Lemus, Littlewhitehead, Christopher Michlig, Raymond Pettibon, William Powhida, Eduardo Sarabia, and Debra Scacco.

If These Walls Could Talk — A Conversation

In the Bedroom

As part of our continuing solo project program in "The Bedroom", Marine is pleased to present new works by London based artist Debra Scacco. Forever in between explores the relationship between physical location, past history, and the concept of 'home'. Scacco's work is a physical manifestation of her ongoing compulsion to define the meaning of 'home'. Predominantly referencing her childhood environment, the subject of each drawing is an object of significance originating from domestic memories or dreams. What appears at first glance as a physical fraying of line is actually text from her writings over the last 15 years. A single sentence persistently repeated on a minute and almost impossible scale, the countless repetition required to complete the form acts as a means of reconciliation with these highly emotional words.

'I am forever in between' is a literal (if not minimal) graphic representation of London. The only indication of the geographic location is the overlapping of layers which clearly forms the Thames river. We see nine circular shapes - some overlapping, some floating as if abandoned by their former owner. Each of these circular shapes represents a location where the artist has lived. Each individual circle drawn represents a month of the artists' life in that location. This piece has been created to scale with a fold out A to Z map of Greater London.
